The use of dolls in dementia care

Complementary therapies for people with dementia
The use of dolls in dementia care

The use of dolls can bring great benefits to some people with a diagnosis of dementia, particularly those in later stages. It involves making a doll available to the person to hold or to sit with.

What are the benefits for people with dementia?

Some people with dementia find that they get enjoyment from holding or simply being with a doll. It might remind them of a time when they had young children of their own or simply create pleasant feelings of reminiscence or affection.

Some family members find that giving the person they care for a doll seems to inspire a renewed sense of purpose, which can lead to increased activity levels and liveliness.

Having a doll to interact with can improve the person’s communication, which can improve in communication with other people.

Tips on giving a doll to the person you care for

• Introduce the doll gradually. You could place it on a chair before the person enters the room. Watch to see how – and if – they respond

• Let the person discover the doll in their own time. If they show no interest in it, do not worry too much about drawing their attention to it. You can always try another day

• If the person with dementia is interested in the doll, use it as a way to connect with them. If they aren’t able to answer questions about the doll, consider making observations about it to them instead, for example: ‘what a nice face’, ‘what a lovely dress’ etc.
Things to be aware of

- Not everyone will want to interact with a doll. If the person shows no interest, do not press the doll upon them.
- Some people dislike seeing a person with dementia with a doll or toy – they might think the person is being treated like a child. Discuss your plans with any other members of your family first to discover their views. Explaining the benefits and the evidence may help soothe any concerns.
- Some people with dementia may become very attached to a doll. Grandchildren or other residents in a care home may pick up the doll which could prove upsetting. Consider using the doll at times when this is unlikely to happen.
- The person may start neglecting their own needs to prioritise the doll, for instance, putting it in their bed while they sleep in a chair, or trying to give it their food. Watch for these signs of attachment and consider using the doll away from meal times and early in the day rather than close to bedtime.
- Be culturally sensitive – consider choosing a doll with the same skin colour as the person.
- Try to avoid using dolls that make a noise e.g. crying noises, as this may cause distress.
- Some people might prefer a cuddly toy or animal so you can try making these available too and allow the person to choose.
The information in this booklet is written and reviewed by dementia specialist Admiral Nurses.

We are always looking to improve our resources, to provide the most relevant support for families living with dementia. If you have feedback about any of our leaflets, please email feedback@dementiauk.org

We receive no government funding and rely on voluntary donations, including gifts in Wills.

For more information on how to support Dementia UK, please visit www.dementiauk.org/donate or call 0300 365 5500.

Publication date: January 2019
Review date: January 2021
© Dementia UK 2019

If you’re caring for someone with dementia or if you have any other concerns or questions, call or email our Admiral Nurses for specialist support and advice.

Call 0800 888 6678 or email helpline@dementiauk.org
Open Monday – Friday, 9am – 9pm
Saturday and Sunday, 9am – 5pm

www.dementiauk.org • info@dementiauk.org

Dementia UK is a registered charity in England and Wales (1039404) and Scotland (SCO47429).