Helping families face dementia

... to carers like Cherry

In 2014 Cherry's mum, Barbara, was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease. A year later, her dad, John, (pictured, with Barbara) was diagnosed with the same condition. Cherry felt abandoned, until she came across a leaflet about Admiral Nurses and got in touch. Rachel, Cherry's Admiral Nurse, gave her strategies to help her cope as a carer and made her realise that she needed to make time for herself so that she could continue to care for her parents.

Then, when Cherry's mum's behaviour became increasingly unpredictable, Rachel helped Cherry find longer-term care for her mum.

“Without Rachel I don't know what I would have done. I see her as a friend who was with me through the most difficult period of my life.”

To

£15 could pay for a new Admiral Nurse for half an hour, reaching a family in crisis with nowhere else to turn. Admiral Nurses give compassionate one-to-one support, expert guidance and practical solutions that can be hard to find elsewhere.

Happy Christmas and thank you
